8 weird and wacky tours around the world Complete with fake smugglers and fake border patrol agents, participants go on a seven and a half mile hike through the central state of Hidalgo where actors will lead you through barbed wire, and you through run ins with drug smugglers while dodging fake patrol cars. Be advised, you’ll also experience being shot at (with blanks) by border patrollers.

Amsterdam is famous for its Red Light District where legal sex workers display themselves in small booths with glass doors and a red light above it. If you’re a little nervous about negotiating the area yourself, you can take a tour of this elusive area, giving visitors the chance to explore the mysteries and secrets of the neighborhood. Stops on the tour include showing you the prostitutes inside the windows, the world’s first specialized condom shop, and an erotic theater.

A virtual ghost town today, you can take a guided tour through the village of Chernobyl, the site of the deadly 1986 nuclear disaster. Groups are taken through government checkpoints into the Exclusion Zone, a 20 mile area that is blocked off to the public, and is only open for special tours. They are then taken to the Chernobyl Power Plant within 100 feet of Reactor 4, the cause of the explosion. Operators say the place is safe to visit now at the end of the tour, every person is checked for radiation levels.
